

From: Capitol Broadcasting Opinion Editor [opinion@cbc-raleigh.com]
Sent: 3/27/2018 8:42:45 AM
To: Little, Jamal [/o=ExchangeLabs/ou=Exchange Administrative Group (FYDIBOHF23SPDLT)/cn=Recipients/cn=69149c51192e44eead4fc5f6b56d18ab-jlittle6]
Subject: [External] CBC opinion newsletter: Tuesday, March 27, 2018

CAUTION: External email. Do not click links or open attachments unless verified. Send all suspicious email as an attachment to Report Spam.

Opinion, commentary and analysis you need from around and about North Carolina. Click here to subscribe.

View this email in your browser

Capitol Broadcasting Company

Tuesday, March 27, 2018

TODAY'S EDITORIAL

Message from rallies -- march to the polls

CBC Editorial: Tuesday, March 27, 2018; Editorial #8282

The following is the opinion of Capitol Broadcasting Company

These kids get it. The message from the outpouring at Saturday's "March for Our Lives" rallies across North Carolina and the nation was more than taking to the streets in protest. It was more than demanding safe schools; more than a call for reasonable control of military assault-style weapons or keeping guns out of the hands of those who shouldn't have them.

It was about action and understanding what kind of action works. It was about registering to vote and marching to the polling place.

In the United States (even North Carolina) if young people – or any people – want change there is no better or more effective way than voting. Tobiah Steele, an East Carolina University sophomore and an organizer of the gathering at the Pitt County Courthouse in Greenville, said it as well as anyone. "We have the ability to change the world," she said. "The first thing we have to do it get out and vote."

Jane Rose and Christina Tschida, voting registrars, were on hand at the rally as young people – and some not so young -- signed up to vote in the May primary and November election.

About 4,800 people across the nation registered to vote at Saturday rallies, according to Aaron Ghitelman, spokesman for HeadCount, a nonpartisan organization that registers young voters at concerts and other youth gatherings. It partnered with the organizers of “March for Our Lives” to assist with voter registration efforts.

Getting young people signed up to vote is no small issue in North Carolina. Five years ago the leadership in the state legislature wanted to make it more difficult for young people to register to vote. They tried to change state law and eliminated preregistration. It took a federal court order to restore pre-registration for young people who would be eligible to vote on Election Day. Now, schools throughout the state conduct voter registration drives.

Young people can also register to vote at the local Division of Motor Vehicle office – as they endure their drivers license tests – a ritual of youthful passage.

Already there are indications of heightened voter interest. In the first three months of the year, total voter registration in the state increased by 62,202 – that’s nearly a 120 percent increase over the same period four years ago. About 80 percent have bypassed the Democrats or Republicans to register as unaffiliated voters.

North Carolina voters have unprecedented choices at the polling place this year. For the first time in decades, there is a challenger for all but one seat in the General Assembly.

The choices aren’t mere matters of personality or political party. The current leaders of the legislature picked increasing corporate tax breaks over improving funding for public schools. Teacher and school administrator pay lags. There aren’t enough school nurses and guidance counselors. Taxpayers are spending millions of dollars on private school vouchers but there’s no transparency or accountability to determine if the money is being used to help students learn. Those are just a few of the public school issues. Do voters want to stay that course or demand a new direction?

Voting is the best way to be heard.

There are plenty of opportunities to register and vote to participate in the May 8 primary or the Nov. 6 election. You don’t have to wait for an event. You can find out all you need to know right here. Don’t delay. Do it today.

See you at the polls.

Opinion Roundup

Tuesday, March 27, 2019 -- A round up of opinion, commentary and analysis on: Thousands of N.C. residents turn out to protest gun violence, an explosion of growth in suburbs, U.S. government opens probe into Facebook, how charter schools can succeed, opioid epidemic and more.

ELECTIONS & CAMPAIGNS

Don't just march for your lives, young people. Vote for them, too (Charlotte Observer) -- Students and other led marches across the country, including in Washington, DC. But young people will be dismissed by officeholders unless they do more.

SLOANE HEFFERNAN: 'People are turning to the streets:' UNC professor says protests are on the rise nationwide (WRAL-TV analysis) -- The Department of Sociology at UNC-Chapel Hill has been tracking the wave of protests following the Parkland, Fla. shooting and throughout the past year, and what they have found is extraordinary, according to the department chairman.

Marching against gun violence (Winston-Salem Journal) -- There were signs. There were speeches. There were snow flurries and rain — and still the marchers came through downtown Winston-Salem into Corpening Plaza, protesting gun violence in America, on Saturday. More than 1,500 people attended the March for Our Lives rally in Winston-Salem and hundreds of thousands gathered in more than 800 cities around the world, including Washington, D.C. “I’m afraid of going to school every day,” Reagan High School freshman Cassie Daukas said at the rally. “I should be going to school to learn, not to worry if it’s my last day alive or if I told my mom I loved her will keep fighting until we feel safe.”

KARI LYDERSEN & MICHAEL SCHERER: Suburban voters angry with Trump threaten GOP's grip on House (Washington Post analysis) -- Many of the most competitive seats in this year's midterms are in bedroom communities near Los Angeles, Chicago, Houston, Washington and other Democratic cities. The balancing act for GOP incumbents is appealing to moderate voters while holding on to the party base.

N.C. Green Party likely to field candidates this fall (AP reports) -- North Carolina voters should have additional candidates to choose from beginning this fall thanks to a new law that makes it easier for third parties to get on ballots.

POLICY & POLITICS

WESLEY YOUNG: North Carolina's 'burbs are booming, Triad and Triangle come together (Greensboro News & Record analysis) -- In a reversal of a trend, U.S. Census Bureau estimates show that growth in the core urban counties of North Carolina is getting outpaced by some of their suburban counties. And some North Carolina counties are seeing higher growth that reflects the area's popularity among retirees.

Judge says release video of Asheville police beating of jaywalker (AP reports) -
- A North Carolina judge has ruled all video in the case of a white police officer accused of using excessive force against a black man accused of jaywalking should be released.

BEN GRAHAM: What NC economic developers might be underselling (Triangle Business Journal analysis) -- Despite all of the financial incentives and jet-setting handshakes North Carolina leaders have taken to court companies interested in moving here, the state might actually be underselling itself when it comes to one of its perceived weaknesses.

CANDACE SWEAT: State prisons announce new action on shackling pregnant inmates(WRAL-TV reports) - -The North Carolina Director of Prisons signed new policies to clarify that female inmates should not be restrained while delivering a child.

MICHAEL GEBLEIN: Mapping Mecklenburg evictions reveals neighborhood trends(Carolina Public Press analysis) -- Charlotte and Mecklenburg County residents in neighborhoods with households receiving public nutrition assistance and with higher populations of children are more likely to be evicted from their homes, according to a newly released study. Conducted by researchers with the UNC-Charlotte Urban Institute and Mecklenburg County Community Support Services, the study maps evictions in Charlotte and Mecklenburg County for the first time.

MATTHEW BURNS: Scratch-offs with dad land Chapel Hill man \$1M lottery prize(WRAL-TV reports) -- An outing with his father led a Chapel Hill man to winning a $1 million lottery prize.

FTC confirms Facebook probe; NC attorney general, 36 others demand answers about user privacy (WRAL-TV/TechWire) -- The U.S. government is investigating Facebook, and chief law enforcement officers for North Carolina from Facebook about user data.

VA care improves, but bureaucracy doesn't (Fayetteville Observer) -- The congressmen came to Fayetteville last week to see how well the Department of Veterans Affairs is caring for the men and women who served their country in war and peace. And even in the town where the VA has arguably improved more than anywhere, they found a work very much in progress.

EDUCATION

GARY ROBERTSON: Report says school boards, counties should stay out of court (AP reports) -- School districts across North Carolina will present next year's funding requests in the coming weeks to local county commissioners, with the potential for costly and lengthy litigation if they can't see eye-to-eye on spending.

RHONDA DILLINGHAM: NC public charter schools stymied by funding (Durham Herald-Sun column) -- A recent report from policy analyst Kris Nordstrom at the N.C. Justice Center claims that charter schools are contributing to increasing racial segregation. Public charter schools are free public schools that are open to all students, and only make up 6 percent of all public schools nationwide. Charter schools should not be labeled as a major contributor to an ongoing problem of segregation.

These NC charter schools show how to succeed with low-income students (Charlotte Observer column) -- Three principles are helping these NC schools and their economically disadvantaged students succeed in testing and college placement

JEREMY BAUER-WOLF: Can the NCAA Basketball Commission Accomplish Anything? (Inside Higher Ed analysis) -- The NCAA does have a big problem. And the question of its impotence once again arose with the scandal that rocked the world of college basketball last year, with coaches of four top-tier teams being charged with accepting cash payments in exchange for steering recruits to certain institutions. The NCAA officials said they had no idea -- and news reports have suggested the corruption is not limited to these programs. The commission, led by former U.S. secretary of state and Stanford University provost Condoleezza Rice, has remained quiet about its work, though it's due to deliver recommendations to the NCAA's governing body, the Board of Directors, late next month. Rice has never publicly discussed progress among its members and her only -- bland -- statement on the NCAA website is from October.

CFCC board is undermining public's trust, support (Wilmington Star-News) -- The people of New Hanover County have been very generous to Cape Fear Community College. On average, North Carolina's community colleges get 57 percent of their funding from the state and 13 percent from counties. On top of that, New Hanover County has invested $164 million in CFCC from bond issues in recent years

HEALTH

TAYLOR KNOPF: Rates of opioid-related ED visits continues to rise in NC (N.C. Health News) -- The rising rate of opioid overdose emergency anytime soon.

MIKE CAUSEY: Save the SHIP and keep funding for seniors' health program (Wilson Times column) -- An effort is underway in Congress to eliminate $47 million that goes to programs like North Carolina's Seniors Health Insurance Information Program. Such an effort fits the old adage of being penny-wise and pound-foolish.

ADAM WAGNER: Eastern N.C. opioid experts support medication-assisted treatment(Wilmington Star-News analysis) -- The Trump Administration's HHS recently moved to support the use of medication to treat opioid disorder.

ENERGY & ENVIRONMENT

TRISTA TALTON: Water Transfer Part of Pender's Growth Plan (Coastal Review analysis) -- Environmental groups support Pender County's request to transfer up to 14.5 million gallons of drinking water per day from the Cape Fear to three smaller river basins to meet increasing demand.

RUSTY JACOBS: Tree Cutting Is Underway For The Atlantic Coast Pipeline, But Opposition In NC Is Staunch (WUNC-FM analysis) -- Crews are already cutting trees in Northampton and Robeson counties to make way for the Atlantic Coast Pipeline , the 600-mile-long delivery system that will carry natural gas from West Virginia, across Virginia, and through North Carolina. The pipeline will cut an eight-county, 200-mile-long path across the Tar Heel State with supporters and opponents all along the route.

Copyright © 2018 Capitol Broadcasting Company, All rights reserved.

Our mailing address is:

2619 Western Boulevard, Raleigh, NC 27606

Want to change how you receive these emails?

You can update your preferences or unsubscribe from this list.